

Underwear to Pajamas Poll Shows Students Prefer Variety

With the completion of registration some rather startling statistics on sleeping apparel of the student body have been garnered. And anyone who asks how we got the statistics on the girls is a dirty so and so.

It was discovered that 35 per cent of the student body sleeps nude, with the remainder sleeping in anything from gutters to long underwear and silk pajamas. Faculty figures were unavailable.

Among the boys it was revealed that 44 per cent of the clad sleepers in take their nightly repose in their underwear, the type depending on the severity of the weather. The remainder of the clad sleepers wear pajamas—either the tops, bottoms or both combined; but, whatever their choice, 100 per cent of these pajama wearers were fanatical in their preference for loud night garments. A very small percentage of these pajama wearers wear their pajamas over their underwear. They were assumed to be either ignorant or from West Virginia, so no figures were taken..

The co-ed statistics revealed that girls are more discriminating than boys. The 35 per cent who sleep nude are particular about the color of the sheets. Among the 65 per cent sleeping clad a numerous assortment of garments is found. Hair curlers, cold cream, cosmetics, etc., are not counted as sleeping apparel) Ten per cent sleep in underwear, which is usually always short and usually with both top and bottom attachments. Twelve per cent sleep in old fashioned night gowns, and 30 per cent or more in the more modern streamlined versions. A paltry few sleep in their petticoats, while the rest lean toward such garments as pajamas and kimonos in their choice of sleeping garments.

The remaining one per cent said that it was nobody's damned business what they slept in.
